

Synopsis

What happens when an atheist discovers he's been chosen to deliver God's new commandment?

"The first time God spoke to me, I was on the toilet."

Thomas is using a public restroom. He is surprised when God starts talking to him from the next stall and tells him that he has been selected to deliver a new commandment to mankind. There's one big problem, though: Thomas is an atheist. His belief structure shattered, his life in shambles, Thomas embarks on a journey he never wanted as he tries to deal with his new life as reluctant prophet. Today, Thomas is crashing an open mic night to tell his story.

The Commandment is a solo dramatic comedy about loss, love and the pitfalls of taking a crap beside the almighty.

Content Warning: This play deals with difficult subject matter including blasphemy, suicide, mental illness, and homelessness.
