Thunder Blunder
presents:

I THINK I'M DEAD

It's a storytelling show about insomnia, Fight Club, and human breakdowns.

There are several jokes in it.

Montreal, QC, CANADA, May 12, 2018. Thunder Blunder Theatre is proud to announce the continuation of its world tour of "I Think I'm Dead" by Al Lafrance, which will be performed at the Theatre Passe-Muraille Backspace, as part of the Toronto Fringe Festival. The show, which has gathered favourable reviews throughout Canada and Australia, and was selected as the best solo show at the 2017 Halifax Fringe, tackles mental instability and rash decision-making via comedic storytelling, a craft that writer/director/performer Al Lafrance has been honing for several years.

"You have to laugh at the worst parts of yourself" says Lafrance, "because we're all flawed. I just feel particularly comfortable discussing my flaws in public." This is Lafrance's second solo storytelling show – he previously won the Just For Laughs Award for Best Comedy in Montreal for his 2014 creation "The Quitter", also a self-deprecating tale of human failure. This was the first of two JFL award wins for Lafrance, who also won the coveted award in 2017 for his participation in Weeping Spoon's "The Ballad of Frank Allen".

I THINK I'M DEAD will be performed at Theatre Passe-Muraille Backspace from July 4th-14th. This is a limited engagement, with 12$ general admission tickets, with discount prices available. More info on the Fringe website (<http://www.fringetoronto.com>) or Lafrance's own site, al-lafrance.com.
