Comedians Examine The Effects Of Growing Up Fatherless Bastards In Their Two-Woman Show

The Show:

2% of Condoms is a duo about two fellow bastards who spend their lives fearing abandonment...with reckless abandon. A sardonic, semi-autobiographical coming-of-age story from the warped minds of comedians, Nikki Bon and Claire Cavalheiro – both born from broken condoms, both raised without their fathers, and both spectacularly bad at dealing with their baggage. Until they have to. (Maybe.) But when you're this badly wired for disaster, can you ever actually change...?

That was the question Nikki and Claire set out to answer – until they each had baby boys one day apart. (Stranger than fiction). Suddenly the show had a new question: what happens when two women shaped by absent fathers become...mothers to sons? After countless late-night Zoom calls across different coasts while rocking newborns, they're finally bringing the carnage of their life to the stage. Playing this summer at the Weyni Mengesha Theatre.

Nikki Bon is a Toronto-born comic based in LA, recently featured on Comics Unleashed. Claire Cavalheiro and her husband, director Scott Anthony Cavalheiro, are currently on the festival circuit with their latest feature film Plan C, starring Vivica A. Fox.
