“There’s a natural banter between the two, with Drew being the optimistic straight man to Tamara’s pessimistic cutting jabs at married life. —Sam Tweedle, KawarthaNow

TORONTO, May 2018 • A few years ago BICK/ANTZIS created a YouTube video called [Settle This Thing](http://Settle This Thing) in order to have the Internet provide a solution to an ongoing argument they couldn’t resolve on their own. They each laid out their argument and told viewers, “Vote for who you agree with and we’ll live with the results.” After a week the married couple tallied the votes and had a winner. Argument solved! “It’s crowd sourcing to solve our fights,” says Antzis, “and it worked!” The web series [Settle This Thing](http://Settle This Thing) was born.

The couple used this method to settle many unresolvable arguments like [what’s appropriate in sexual fantasies](http://what’s appropriate in sexual fantasies), [front seat driving](http://front seat driving) and [should we share dreams](http://should we share dreams); then in 2017 decided to take their fights to the stage. Now BICK/ANTZIS is coming to the Toronto Fringe Festival to put some fresh disputes in the ring for a vote. When asked if audiences are enjoying the show Bick thinks they really are, “Because we are unpacking and analyzing falling in love and sex and kids and all that stuff in a really scientific-ish way, they find it is very valuable info.” Antzis adds, “People love it. And want it. They eat it up.”
