

Sydney is 27 years old and she has been trying to make it in the world of musical theatre for her entire life. All she has to show for it is a long string of heart crushing rejections, a bad attitude, and a lot of body image issues. So she has decided to go out with a bang, and you are invited to her farewell spectacular! Watch as Sydney starts her journey to entering into a “boring, normal, rich person job”, which turns out to be more difficult than she previously thought. (Turns out the job market is kind of tough right now!) However there’s one person who does not want Sydney to quit- and that’s her younger self. Once Young Syd makes her unexpected entrance and is ready to fight her future self for her dreams, the two must work together to find common ground and realize that there is always a new path forward, no matter how impossible it may seem. With the two of them singing, dancing, and horsing around, things will take a turn for the chaotic, the silly, and perhaps, eventually, the heartwarming? Featuring parody songs, original work, and more references than you can possibly catch, this show is not just for the musical theatre fans, it’s for anyone who has lived the human experience of not feeling like they’re good enough for their dreams. Cold Maple Cloth is a campy, rude, bold love letter to the world of theatre. It will make you take a look in the mirror and say, what am I doing with my life? And is it truly making me happy?
