Leroy Street Theatre Presents a Site-Specific Production of Little One by Hannah Moscovitch in a Real Toronto Condo Building

Leroy Street Theatre and Dresser Drawer Productions invites audiences into an intimate and unsettling theatrical experience with Little One, a chilling psychological thriller by acclaimed Canadian playwright Hannah Moscovitch. This site-specific production transforms a real Toronto condo building into the world of the play, placing audiences directly inside the story.

Little One follows adopted siblings Aaron and Claire—one seemingly well-adjusted, the other deeply disturbed—as their lives intertwine with those of their neighbours: a reclusive man and his mail-order bride. What begins as quiet domestic observation spirals into a disturbing exploration of control, isolation, and the hidden lives unfolding behind closed doors.

Directed by Alice Fox Lundy (director of last year's sell-out Fringe hit The Adding Machine), the production stars Wayne Burns and Dora Award winner Izzi Nagel. Lighting and sound design is by Chin Palipane (Confessions of a Redheaded Coffeeshop Girl, The Adding Machine).

Known for her incisive and emotionally charged writing, Moscovitch crafts a tense, voyeuristic narrative that blurs the line between observer and participant. In this immersive staging, audience members are not just spectators but witnesses, experiencing the play's psychological intensity at close range.

With extremely limited seating, each performance offers a rare and immediate encounter with one of Canada's most gripping contemporary works. Little One asks a haunting question: how well do you know your neighbours?
