BECAUSE BREAKING UP IS HILARIOUS TO DO
in CAITLIN & ERIC ARE BROKEN UP.

We've all been there: After a relationship ends. You're lost, You're lonely, your self-esteem is in the toilet. Your heart says you're not ready to move on yet-- and your other parts tell it to shut. right. up.

The play is centered on an imaginary rebound between Caitlin Robson (Karenin's Anna, Fringe 2014; Seams, Summerworks 2015) and Eric Miinch (Behold! The Barfly! Fringe 2016; Fratwurst Comedy) In 2015, the respective actress and improviser met at an open-mic where they each told true stories from their past relationships. He liked hers. She liked his. This play is a combination of both their stories. Throughout the show, they transition between the present and their past, playing each others' partners. Through this painfully funny encounter Caitlin and Eric explore the meaning of love, marriage and divorce, fidelity, growing up, growing out of love, and the art of moving on.

The show is directed and co-written by Toronto's own feminist comedian, Jess Beaulieu, of the Crimson Wave Comedy and Podcast; and devised through a one-of-a-kind experiment in storytelling, improv and written sketch

If there are any lonely hearts out there looking for a laugh, this one goes out to you!
