Controversial play ‘The Road to Damascus’ comes to Toronto Fringe

Two men in a police station in suburban France: a police officer and a young man suspected of wanting to join a terrorist group. One defends the many opportunities given by our society, the other represents a youth lost to disillusionment. Thus begins a tense interrogation, a game of chess, with each opponent trying to throw the other one off their tracks. Their visions of the Western world confront each other, clash ... who will convert whom?

The Road to Damascus was written by Dominique Ziegler, a Swiss playwright. It premiered in 2015 and has played in theatres in Belgium, France and Switzerland. It is translated by David Eden, who adapted Douglas Coupland’s Life After God for the Toronto Fringe in 2001. To Hell and Back Theatre Company was founded in 2001 to take Life After God on a Fringe festival tour through Saskatoon, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria.

The Road to Damascus stars Daniel Coo and Ethan Saulnier. It is directed by David Eden. Sound design is by Dan Schaumann; lighting design is by Zie Souwand; and the fight director is Richard Comeau. The production stage manager is Zie Souwand.

Don’t miss this play that has been controversial in Europe!
