

The Toronto Fringe Festival Presents: THINGS THE TREES TAUGHT THEM

An original play by Meg Webster.

Have you ever heard about tree planting? Have you heard it's one of the hardest jobs? Have you heard about how much money you can make? Have you heard that it can make and break your spirit? Have you heard about the unbelievable friendships you can develop while sitting around the fire? Come learn about planting and maybe even yourself at the same time.

Graduating from Ryerson Theatre School in 2015 Meg went on to start tree planting in Northern Alberta to take a break from the hustle of city life. Little did she know she would find herself in the bush four years later still loving and hating this weird wacky world of tree babies. A play emerged through compiling together many journal entries over all her seasons. She is very excited to share this story of human resilience, love, self discovery and severe dehydration.
